

Remember, there are two of test, one to show if you've had the virus after but the one these NHS staff are up for at a superstore car park turned testing drive-through, if you have the virus right now. If the of these cars are negative, they get back onto the desperately wards as doctors and nurses. That is why it is so now. It is very frustrating. We should be the so that we can look after our patients. I'm very . It is quite efficient and it allows us to go to work as soon as we could, really, so that is the thing we could possibly do for NHS staff, to be Testing has the most acute problem in this crisis, with the Labour MP Dawn Butler, who her uncle to the disease, in and anger, insisting the government to test everyone who works in hospitals without We are going to need a strategy for community-based testing for the majority of the population over , because that is the out of lockdown. But a former Cabinet Secretary, no to managing crises, suggests there be deeper to the problem. Does it seem to you, that the government was slow? I think when we back on it, and I think all of us should take a of the blame here, pandemics, even in my time, was top of the register.
